Ghastly Story About Napoleon. At Plogastel, in Brittany, says a French paper, there is living an English physician named Thomas Cartwell, aged $2 years, who tells trav. ellers a strange story, in which he says he fige ured as a principal actor. On the 5th of May, 1821, Napoleon the Great died at Longwood, St. Helens, after causing Sir Hudson Lowe so much unhappiness that he went crazy, and, returning to England, lost all his fortune in extravagant speculations in stocks. The Emperor's last companions, Bertrand, Montholon, Gourgand and Lassases. immediately made a demand for a physician expert in the science of embalming. Sir Hudson Lowe, who shrank from no expense, sent a physician, an Italian named Automarchi, who had attended the Emperor when he was troubled with a sty in the eye. The dector hastened to his work, but certain instruments were needed. He required at least two assistants. etc., etc. Sir Hudson Lowe made haste to supply all his demands. He sent a boat to an English frigate at anonor in the offing, with a request for two paval surgoods, supplied with everything required for the embalming process. One of the two persons sent was a youth of twenty scars, well educated and full of ambition, and he was received on the island as Assistant Surgeon Thes. Cartwell. He and his comrade has eneed to assist Dr. Antomarchi. About four in the afternoon of May 6 the work was begun. The corpse of Napoleon I was lifeed from the little bed where he had died and placed on a long mathle topped table that was still intact when, in 1858, Napoleon III bought, with Government finade, the small house in which had died the man whom he persis ed in making the public believe to have been his uncle. The process of embalming was not finished when night came and interrupted it .--Antomarchi and his assistants agreed that the completion of it must be postponed until the next morning. They determined to go to bed and resume their work at daybreak. First they covered the Emperor's body with a white cloth, which they sprinkled and saturated with certain liquids to prevent putrefaction. various internal organs that had been removed were placed in metal cups on the operating table. Then the three operators went to their rooms and slept profoundly. They had hardly been asleep an hour when Marchand, the valet of the dead Emperor, knocked at Cartwell's door, calling out, "Come down, sir, quick! A great misfortune has just happened." "What is i.?" said the young sur-seon, appearing in his uniform. "Oh, sir, the Emperor's hear; has been caten by the rate!" It was true. The island was infested with rats. They were as thick as the English. While Merchand was cut of the reom, some rats had run in, and finding the heart of the conqueror of Austerlitz in a basio, had made but a mouthful of it. The valet, on returning to the room, saw them scamper away, and all he could do was to What was now to be don? The physiciats met and consulted. It was impossible to conceal the absence of the organ that had been eaten up, the operation of embalming having been began tefore witness who had seen it. To confess the accident was to expose Merchand to severe rebuke, and the poor fellow was a'ready wretched enough. A happy thought ocsheep's heart," he suggested to Automarchi with excessive caution. All the persons present looked at one another nervously, hesitated, and then began to laugh together like four Roman augurs. They understood one another. Marchand ran to a neighboring farm killed a sheep, and brought back its heart still warm and palpitating.

On the next day, the 7th of May, Automarchi and his assistants, in the presume of Gen. Bertrand and M. de Montholou, finished the embalming of the Emperor, without any persons among his suite in the less; suspecting the extraordinary performance of the night before. If the story is true, and if the old retired English ex-Surgeon of Plogastel is not a jaker, the heart of the sheep of St. Helena has been resting for thirty-eight years under the dome of the Invalideel

WHERE THE APOSTLES REST. - Catholic authorities state that the remains of the Apostles of Christ are now in the followidg places:-Seven are in Rome, namely, Peter, Philip, James the Lasser, Jude, Bartholomew, Matthis and Simon. Three are in the Kingdom of Naples, Matthew at Salerno, Andrew at Amalfi, and Themas at Octobs. One is in Spain, James the Greater, whose remains are at St. Jago de Compestella. Of the body of St. John the Evangelist, the remaining one of the twelve, there is no knowledge. The Evangelists Mark and Luke are also in Italy-the former at Venico and the latter at Padus. St. Paul's remainstare also believed to be in Italy. Peter's are, of course, in the church at Rome, which is called after him, as are also those of Simon and Jude. Those of James the Lasser and of Philip are in the Church of the Holy Apostles; Bartholomew's in the church on the island in the Tiber called after him, while Matthias' are in the Santa Maria Maggiore, under the great altar of the renowned basilica.

PURE CREAM SYRUPS.—Chocolate, Nec-tar, Coffee, &c., &c. For our Soda we claim a superiority, it having been pronounced by connoisseurs to be unrivaled in its general character, combining an ice coolness with the finest flavored syrups, of which fact we have full evidence from the compliments which we are constantly receiving from our patrons.
